FROM EAGLE LAKE DISTRICT

Excellent Showings From The Different Properties Under Development.

Mr. Jas. Forneri, of the Eagle Lake section is in town today. Speaking of the prospects for that district during the coming summer he said they were very bright, and he was glad to say that all the work that has been done the past few months has borne out the anticipations of those who pinned their faith to that district. All the veins cut the formation and run north-west and south-east and appear to be true fissure veins. The district is well wooded with magnificent big trees.

The Higbee mine, which is being developed by St. Paul people, under the management of Newton Higbee, is fully satisfying the owners.

The shaft is down over 70 feet and at the 60 foot level a drift is being run to the level of the water at the side of the hill. It is now in 90 feet, and when completed will make excellent ventilation for the shaft. This drift is nearly all in quartz, the vein at this level being 4 feet wide with splendid walls. At the surface the vein was 3½ feet wide, but gradually widened till at the bottom of the shaft it is 5 feet. Mr. Forneri says that some of the best and most economical work has been done upon the property of any he has seen in the district. The values are splendid and visible gold specimens can be secured from almost any portion of this shaft.

The Viking mine is owned by the Swede boys, and is situated on an island. They have sunk a pit 12 feet and have a vein of five feet in width, traceable about 15 chains. The prospectors have secured a splendid lot of visible gold specimens from this property.

Mr. Castor, of Buffalo, who owns the Grace location, is expected to arrive about June 1st to do some work upon his property which has the reputation of being one of the richest in the Eagle Lake district.

Speaking about the Baden-Powell mine, in which he is interested with Mr. Partington, of this town, Mr. Forneri said that they have a shaft down 16 feet, with six feet of pay ore in the bottom. It all pans good and there is lots of visible gold. To verify this statement we were shown some of the best specimens ever seen in the district. One piece of quartz, about the size of a man's head, had nuggets of gold all over it. This chunk, however, came from a smaller vein 2 feet wide, not far from the one they are sinking on. On the larger vein they have also put in another test pit, 11 feet deep, with 7 feet of quartz, with about the same results in values. This vein has been traced about 1,700 feet.

Mr. Forneri says prospecting is very difficult in the Eagle Lake district for the reason that the rock is covered with a thick growth of moss and also heavily wooded.

There are several other claims on which prospectors are working, and all with very good results.

Wabigoon Iron Range.

Last week the prospectors who have taken up a big area along the Wabigoon Iron Range went out to their property and did some stripping and other surface work, exposing some magnificent iron ore, which looks even better than that which was assayed and gave 67.5 per cent.

Some of the ore was shown to Prof. Sohier, who has had experience in iron, and he pronounced it to be perfect, and if it is in sufficient quantity, he considers it to be one of the finest iron propositions he has come across in his experience.

The range is found due north of Barclay station and is only half a mile from the main line of the C.P.R.—Wabigoon Star.

FATHER OF THE TROLLEY DEAD.

J. C. Henry, of Woodstock, Passes Away in Colorado.

Woodstock, May 7.—J. C. Henry, son of Thomas Henry, of this town, died in Denver, Col., recently. To Mr. Henry must be given the credit of the invention of the trolley car. The first trolley line was constructed under his direction from Kansas City to the town of Independence near by, about 16 years ago. For some years he was associated with Edison when the latter was head of the General Electric company.

WOMEN'S HOSPITAL AID

Review of the Work of the Society During the Past Year.

During the past year the Women's Hospital Aid Society has held regular monthly meetings in the town hall on the last Saturday of each month. The average attendance was six, and the president, Mrs. Pither, was in the chair at every meeting.

Since the opening of our little hospital the system of water supply has been a constant drain on the finances, for up to last fall the average monthly water bill was in the neighborhood of $35.00. During the summer the board of directors came to the conclusion that a lead pipe could be laid across the bay to connect the hospital with the water works system of the town. This work has been completed, is most satisfactory and the ladies were pleased to assist in the payment of the debt incurred.

In August Mr. MacKenzie, of the Glasgow House, very generously offered the society 10 per cent. of a two days' sale.

On New Years' night, the "Old Maids' Convention" was given in the opera house by local talent, the proceeds from which helped us very considerably.

We must not forget to mention Mrs. Hamilton's painting class exhibition and tea.

The annual hospital carnival was held on Jan. 28th and was one of the most successful ever given under the auspices of this society. The new rink with its increased accommodation for the serving of refreshments was a great help and the enlarged area of ice was appreciated by all. We heartily thank the Band for excellent music and their kindness for rendering their services gratuitously.

Liberal contributions of canned fruit were sent to the hospital during the year by the ladies of Keewatin and Rat Portage and we have been encouraged by many tokens of thoughtfulness in the way of books, magazines, flowers and delicacies which found their way to those who left homes and boarding houses to go to that place which some years ago was looked upon as a purely charitable institution, but which today is the occasional habitation of all classes who require nursing and care while regaining health and strength.

In August Miss Ross handed in her resignation as she was leaving Rat Portage, and Mrs. Chapman was appointed in her place.

Towns, the English Sculler, Refuses to Cover Gaudaur's Deposit at Bank Here.

The Toronto Evening Telegram of May 5 contains the following special cable:

"George Towns, the English champion sculler, refuses to cover Gaudaur's deposit in the Imperial Bank at Rat Portage. He will deposit £100 with the London Sportsman, and states that Gaudaur must cover the same and send along the articles, for approval and signature. Towns further stipulates that the entire stake and the amount must be in the hands of the Sportsman before he leaves England.

"Tom Sullivan, ex-champion, speaking for Towns, says he will allow Gaudaur £100 expenses if he will agree to have the race for the world's championship on the Thames."

On receipt of the above Champion Gaudaur expressed no special surprise as it is quite evident that he, like the majority of people thinks that Towns

BOUND FOR NORTH POLE

A Sketch of Captain Bernier, the Distinguished Canadian Traveller.

As the Canadian public has become so deeply interested in Captain Bernier's plans for reaching the North Pole, it will not be out of place to familiarize them with the life history of this greatest of Canadian captains.

Some men are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness forced upon them.

Captain J. E. Bernier belongs to the former class. He was born at Islet, Que., on January 1st, 1852. His mother had a presentiment from the first that little Elzear was destined to be a great man and in that she was right, for if sterling character, honesty, integrity and genuine kindness constitute true greatness, then indeed Captain Bernier is a great man. These qualities have endeared him to his home circle, to his intimate friends, to the men who have labored and suffered with him in storm and tempest. To the world at large Captain Bernier is known as the originator of the most natural, common sense scheme for discovering the North Pole that has ever been brought before the public. Captain Bernier is a sailor among sailors. His life has been on the ocean wave, and his home on the rolling deep since the tender years of his infancy. He lived at sea all his life with the exception of five years, from seven till twelve years of age, that he attended school at his native home, l'Islet. When only one year old he went to sea with his parents. His father was then in the lumber trade and made voyages between the West Indies, New York, Boston and England. He was at the bombardment of Sebastopol in 1855. His father at that time was master of the "Zillah," and had gone there with a cargo of military stores for the British. As the seige was in operation he could not unload his cargo and was ordered to Malta, where he waited the return of the fleet.

Even from the tender age of four years Captain Bernier remembers many incidents that happened in Malta. He relates how on one occasion when the sailors were passing along the street his father went into a store to make some purchases whilst his mother remained outside to watch the sailors pass. On coming out of the store his mother was nowhere to be seen. A sailor had picked her up, seventeen years of age. He took charge of this vessel in Quebec, went to Teignmouth, Devonshire, England, and came back safely. On the return journey he had the entire responsibility, as John McLeod, his mate, met with an accident, and was invalided during the entire passage. The voyage from Teignmouth to Sydney he made in seventeen days. From Sydney he went to Boston with a cargo of coal. He remained on the same vessel till November, 1870. On November 8th of this memorable year he married Rose Caron, his youthful choice. Previous to his marriage, during the first year of his absence and their courtship, only one letter was exchanged between them, at the New Year. The same thing happened during four subsequent years. In his sixteenth year he wrote two letters to Rose, and at seventeen years of age he ventured a visit. He married at the age of nineteen, less one month. Two weeks after his marriage he left his youthful bride and sailed for Liverpool on the St. Michael. He remained in the same vessel till March, 1872.

Captain Bernier has crossed the Atlantic ocean one hundred and seventy-eight times and commanded in all forty-six vessels. He has sailed round the world several times. He was employed first by Mr. Peter Baldwin, for whom he sailed twelve new vessels. After this he remained in the employ of James J. Ross for 20 years. During this time, besides his numerous voyages, he superintended the repairing of their ships in different parts of the world. On retiring from the latter firm he was appointed government dock master at Levis. On resigning that position he was made governor of Quebec gaol. It was at this time that Captain Bernier lectured on the best way to reach the North Pole, submitting two different propositions. In relating how he contracted the North Pole fever Captain Bernier states: "In 1878 I took a new ship across from Quebec to Liverpool and sold the vessel at that port. There I learned that Captain De Long was in Havre fitting out a Polar expedition. I went over," he continued, "from Liverpool to Havre to see him. I there and then resolved to find out all I could about the Polar regions, and during all the succeeding years I bought every book that has ever been published on the Arctic Ocean and Arctic voyages. When I had studied everything I could find on the subject," the captain adds, "I came to the conclusion that the North Pole could be reached more easily and surely by following the laws of nature, for I have found out by much travelling that everything on earth is made for man and all we have to do is to help ourselves to what we have before us."

THE ONTARIO HOMESTAKE

Another Splendid Body of Ore Encountered in the North Cross-cut.

The new contractors at the Homestake mine continue to do good, practical and systematic work. They are making splendid progress in the work of cross-cutting the immense vein. This week they encountered a body of ore in the cross-cut north from the shaft at the 100 foot, similar to that in the south cross-cut, where a body of quartz 35 feet wide was met. The new strike so far as penetrated yet, is 8½ feet. It is a band of comparatively high-grade ore. Other parallel bands, some smaller and some larger, of a similar grade and color, had already been encountered in the 100 foot cross-cut towards the south, as referred to in previous reports as Mikadoite, that being the very apt term applied to the bluish grey and mottled greens peculiar to the very richest pay streaks in our two most productive and promising mines, viz., the Mikado and Sultana, and in this connection it may confidently be added that the mere matter of similarity in appearance, encouraging as it is, is not the only cause for congratulation—the values in gold being highly satisfactory.

It may also be stated that since the opening of navigation general mining operations have received an impetus and all this taken in connection with the marked improvement in the mining market, there has been a consequent demand for shares in this company.

A short time ago the Homestake company offered 25,000 shares for sale at 25c each, and we are informed that within the past week all but a couple of thousand shares have been sold. This must be gratifying to the directors and especially so as it is a demand created by the bright prospects of the property. A complete and up-to-date plant will soon be installed to facilitate the mining operations.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

Ladies' Hospital Aid Society Financial Statement from April 20th, 1900, to April 30th, 1901:

Deposit at Bank Here.

The Toronto Evening Telegram of May 5 contains the following special cable:

"George Towns, the English champion sculler, refuses to cover Gaudaur's deposit in the Imperial Bank at Rat Portage. He will deposit £100 with the London Sportsman, and states that Gaudaur must cover the same and send along the articles, for approval and signature. Towns further stipulates that the entire stake and the amount must be in the hands of the Sportsman before he leaves England.

"Tom Sullivan, ex-champion, speaking for Towns, says he will allow Gaudaur £100 expenses if he will agree to have the race for the world's championship on the Thames."

On receipt of the above Champion Gaudaur expressed no special surprise as it is quite evident that he, like the majority of people, thinks that Towns is looking for a little notoriety and is not at all anxious to secure a race with the world's champion. Yesterday he sent the following reply to Towns' manager:

"Cannot concede to Towns' last proposal. Have conceded everything within reason. If my last proposal is not accepted, must conclude Towns and Sullivan are not acting in good faith. My proposal was strictly within my rights as champion oarsman of the world."

It looks very much as though we would not have a race for the championship this year. Towns has failed to exhibit the nerve which his blustering for months has led people to expect. Perhaps Ruhmor, who has also been trambled with big ideas for some time past, will come to the front with a challenge and the necessary collateral. He will, at least, have to furnish a different set of excuses from Towns, and it would be interesting to know what they are.

The entertainment to be given by the Waragraph Entertainment Company in the Hilliard opera house will be under the auspices of the Citizens' band.

The retail clerks met Tuesday evening and elected the following officers for the present year: Hon. President, A. M. Rose; President, J. H. Murphy; First Vice-President, H. J. Cummer; Second Vice-President, G. Bolton; Treasurer, D. D. Stewart; Guard, F. L. Taylor; Sentinel, C. A. Mabey.

Captain Bernier's Adventures.

Attended School at His Native Home, Yslet. When Only One Year Old He Went to Sea with His Parents.

His Father was Then in the Lumber Trade and Made Voyages Between the West Indies, New York, Boston and England. He was at the Bombardment of Sebastopol in 1855. His Father at that time was Master of the "Zillah," and had gone there with a Cargo of Military Stores for the British. As the seige was in operation he could not unload his cargo and was ordered to Malta, where he waited the return of the fleet.

Even from the tender age of four years Captain Bernier remembers many incidents that happened in Malta. He relates how on one occasion when the sailors were passing along the street his father went into a store to make some purchases whilst his mother remained outside to watch the sailors pass. On coming out of the store his mother was nowhere to be seen. A sailor had picked her up, thrown her across his shoulder and walked off with her. Captain Bernier (the father) pursued the thief and struck him across the face with a little cane he carried in his hand. The blow stunned the sailor, who fell to the ground. At the sight of the bleeding wound on the sailor's head Mrs. Bernier fainted. He also tells how the captains who visited his father's vessel made him presents of money. He amused himself by throwing these coins into the water just to see the zig-zag course they took to the bottom. After leaving Malta he sailed with his parents between Montreal and the West Indies till he was seven years of age. Then he returned to Yslet and remained at school till he was twelve years old. It was at this tender age that he first met Rose Caron, who many years later became his wife. His courtship he pursued in the same definite, methodical manner which characterizes every incident of his life. At this time his father was building a ship, and our hero and his brother helped on the work during their holidays and after school hours. Every morning a number of ropes were put to soak and after school hours little Elzear and his brother had to pick this out before they were allowed to play. Thus during his tender years he was taught the necessity of labor. When the St. Joseph was finished (such was the name of the new ship) Elzear left home, bade adieu to his mother and Rose, and went on board his father's ship as "boy." The next year he became a sailor, began to steer the ship and learned to take observations. His father bought him an old quadrant for five dollars and every day at twelve o'clock he went on the poop with the officer in charge to take the sun. Captain Tyrell, who was with them at the time, showed him how to arrange a day's work and taught him to speak English. The following year he became second mate and sailed to foreign ports. This he continued for two subsequent years. He could now take the longitude of the ship and understood its management perfectly. He went afterwards as mate with his uncle, Joseph Bernier, and on the 11th August, 1860, was appointed master of the brigantine St. Joseph. At this time he was only

"Hand pigs," or in the eastern parlance, unlicensed groggeries, in the face of provincial and Dominion statute stand side by side with the navvies' shacks right along the line of railway construction. The missionary in one case preached his first sermon in a hotel standing with back to the bar, a small audience in the dining-room before him, and was compelled to preach to the accompaniment of the clinking glasses, rattling of dice, and the coarse talk of the guzzling, gambling crew occupying the bar. It might be added that our persevering and courageous herald of the cross preaching now without interruption to the limited audience of dining-room occupants. Two murders have been committed within six months in the district, cause, drink.

The above is what a correspondent of the Westminster in New Ontario writes. When seen this morning regarding the letter, Provincial License Inspector J. K. Stewart stated that the board of Commissioners for the Rainy River district had been notified of the fact that they had wrongfully granted three licenses along the line of the New Ontario and Rainy River Railway. The licenses in question had been cancelled and Inspector Webster of Fort Frances instructed to rigorously enforce the law in the new district. Police Magistrate McDougall, of Fort William, was now exercising the powers of a magistrate over the workmen engaged in road construction, and a number of low groggeries had been closed down, and their manager heavily fined.—Toronto News.

The above is a rather strong picture, but does not refer to this end of the district. The three licenses which were cancelled were along the line of the new Rainy River Railway and were issued in ignorance of the clause in the Public Works Act prohibiting them within three miles of a railway under construction, and hence the difficulty. One of the license holders says he had spent $5,000 on the hotel and has $1,200 worth of liquors on hand and asks the Provincial Department for compensation. The district along the new railway has been placed under the jurisdiction of the Fort William magistrate. The correspondent is off when he states that two murders have been committed in the district within six months. He evidently includes the Sullivan murder, which occurred in Rainy Lake City, Minnesota. The Rainy River district has enough sins of its own, the same as any other section, without counting in the crimes of the neighboring states.

COLOSSAL BUSINESS OF ENGLAND.

In these days of United States expansion in trade, to what American claim to be a loss to Great Britain, Canadians will take pleasure in reading that the story has two sides. For instance, in the Commonwealth, a high class periodical published in Ottawa, a writer on the situation shows that the "loss" so-called, which Britain is laboring under is due not to American expansion and ability to be supreme in the world's markets, but to Britain's inability to fill orders fast enough to keep up to the demand.

It is also refreshing to note that influential American journals have lately been pointing out that their more regardless of fact contemporaries are misinforming the public in this matter. The Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin says:

The business of United States is vast but, taking it as a whole, the United States will have to work many years to reach the altitude Great Britain has achieved. The imports and exports of the United Kingdom for the year ending March 31, 1901, have been published, and the figures evidence that there is no decline in the tight little isle. The figures for 1901 are larger in every department than those in 1900. The imports and exports aggregate £877,448,917, or over $4,300,000,000. The entire import and export trade of the United States does not exceed $2,400,000,000. The figures in England are somewhat swelled by the fact that prices of consumable articles are from 10 to 20 per cent. higher than usual. This creates a larger valuable without an increase in the volume of trade. Still it must not be forgotten that even under apparently adverse circumstances, Great Britain shows a balance of trade in her favor which is startling. She carried half the cargo of the world in her shipping, and the immense profit she realizes from that shipping renders her strong and safe when the balance of trade is apparently against her. The United States is trying to obtain a portion of that carrying trade, but no large results can be realized until we can build and man vessels cheaper than England. At the present day this seems an impossibility.

In concluding his study of the Victorian Era of British Expansion in the May number of the North American Review Sir Robert Giffen says:

"The symposium on Industrial and Railroad Consolidations in the May number of the North American Review opens with an article by the venerable financier, Russell Sage regards with grave suspicion the business methods of the present time, in accordance with which a number of concerns are combined into one great corporation. They may, he thinks, lead us to the brink of disaster, if they do not precipitate us over the brink. The uneasiness with which the public regards the formation of the so-called trusts, and the hostile attitude of the general press, constitute a danger signal which should not be ignored by those who are responsible for the organization of those powerful combinations. Mr. Sage comments upon the great increase which has taken place in requests for loans based on industrials.

"No one can even estimate the amount of money that has been advanced on securities of this class; but it is a conservative estimate to say that industrial loans are as ten to one compared with conditions a few years ago. This is apparent from the business offered at my office from day to day. The volume of money in the country is entirely inadequate to meet anything like the demands that are made on collateral of this class. In fact, we have gotten away entirely from the idea of making the money of the country the basis of our trading. Instead, there is thrown into the business world, to be used as a trading medium millions upon millions of stocks, the real value of which is yet to be determined. As soon as this is thoroughly realized, we may look for trouble pending a readjustment. This can be predicted with perfect safety."

INNOCENT ABBE PUT TO DEATH.

Servant Now Confesses to Crime for Which He Was Executed in 1894.

Paris, May 5.—Great excitement was created at Laval, department of Mayenne, in July, 1894, over the execution of Abbe Brunneau, who was accused of murdering his vicar, Abbe Entrammes. On ascending the scaffold Abbe Brunneau forwarded a sealed letter to the procurator of the republic requesting that it be opened immediately.

Jeamette, one of the cure's servants, who has just died at Nantes, confessed before her demise that she and another servant committed the crime and immediately confessed to Abbe Brunean in order to seal his mouth. This statement has caused intense excitement here, and there are urgent demands that the procurator, who is now the deputy from Mayenne, shall reveal the contents of the sealed letter.

Tale of a Stamp.

I am a stamp—
A postage-stamp—
A two-center:
Don't want to brag,
But I was never Licked
Except once:
By a gentlemen, too.
He put me on
To a good thing:
It was an envelope—
Perfumed, pink, square;
I've been stuck on
That envelope
Ever since;
He dropped us—
That envelope and me—
Through a slot in a dark box;
But we were rescued
By a mail clerk;
More's the pity:
He hit me an awful
Smash with a hammer:
It left my face
Black and blue:
Then I went on a long Journey
Of two days:
And when we arrived—
The pink envelope and me—
We were presented
To a perfect love
Of a girl,
With the stunningest pair
Of blue eyes
That ever blinked:
Say, she's a dream!
Well, she mutilated
The pink envelope
And tore one corner
Of me off
With a hairpin;
Then she read what
Was inside
The pink envelope.
I never saw a girl blush
So beautifully;
I would be stuck
On her—if I could.
Well, she placed
The writing back
In the pink envelope;
Then she kissed me.
Oh, you little goddess!
Her lips were ripe
As cherries,
And warm
As the summer sun.
We—
The pink envelope and me—
Are now
Nestling snugly
In her bosom:
We can hear
Her heart throbs
When it goes fastest.
She takes me out
And kisses me.
Oh, say,
This is great!
I'm glad
I'm a stamp—
A two-center.

A Tonic for Mothers

The happiness that comes to a home with baby's advent is too frequently shadowed by the ill-health or weakness of the mother. To restore the mother's strength and bring back vigor and energy, and to sustain her during the nursing period, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is undoubtedly the most effective preparation obtainable. It makes the blood rich, revitalizes the nerves, and has a wonderful restorative influence on the whole system. 50 cents a box, all dealers.

000,000. The figures in England are somewhat swelled by the fact that prices of consumable articles are from 10 to 20 per cent. higher than usual. This creates a larger valuable without an increase in the volume of trade. Still it must not be forgotten that even under apparently adverse circumstances, Great Britain shows a balance of trade in her favor which is startling. She carried half the cargo of the world in her shipping, and the immense profit she realizes from that shipping renders her strong and safe when the balance of trade is apparently against her. The United States is trying to obtain a portion of that carrying trade, but no large results can be realized until we can build and man vessels cheaper than England. At the present day this seems an impossibility.

In concluding his study of the Victorian Era of British Expansion in the May number of the North American Review, Mr. Alleyne Ireland devotes himself to the colonies and India. The area of the British colonial empire grew during the reign of the late Queen from a little over seven million square miles to nearly eleven million square miles, and its population increased correspondingly. The city of Melbourne today contains more people than did the whole of Australasia forty years ago. Mr. Ireland gives a very interesting account of the influences by which emigration of the surplus population of Great Britain to the colonies was stimulated and directed, and of the gradual establishment in them of autonomy and commercial independence, under which they have grown and prospered. Mr. Mr. Ireland describes the Wakefield system of colonization, which was finally adopted by the government:

"Through the influence of Wakefield the National Colonization Society was founded in 1830, with the object of drawing the attention of the government to the need of colonial reform and of inducing the colonial office to apply the principles embodied in the Wakefield system. The opinions and theories known to students as the Wakefield system may be briefly summarized. Starting from the axiom that new countries cannot be developed without labor supply, Wakefield proceeded to inquire into the causes which limited the labor supply in the British non-tropical colonies. A large number of emigrants went out each year, and still the colonies made little progress. The reason was not far to seek. Under the system then in vogue of giving free grants of land to all indiscriminately, the government removed at once the only motive which would cause a laborer to hire out his service. As soon as they landed in a colony, the newcomers, irrespective of their previous condition of life, proceeded to occupy land, so that the capitalist found himself with land and no labor, and the laborer was equally unfortunate in the possession of land without capital. Thus things were at a stand still; the labor was there, but it would not hire itself to the capital; the capital was there, but it could not find employment. Wakefield proposed to remedy this state of things by stop-

RICH, RED BLOOD.

ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

Through the Blood Every Organ, Every Nerve and Every Tissue in the Body is Nourished—If the Blood is Impure Disease Takes Possession of the System.

If you want to be well take care of the blood. The blood is aptly termed the vital fluid, and it is through it that every organ and every tissue of the body is nourished. If the blood becomes impoverished, the entire system is in danger of a breakdown, and what is termed anaemia, general debility, or even consumption may be the result. Prudent people occasionally take a tonic for the purpose of keeping the blood pure, but the the unwell are those to whom this article is chiefly valuable, as it will point out an easy and speedy means to restored health. Mrs. Joseph Herbert, who keeps a grocery at the corner of St. Germain and Hermoine streets, St. Sauveur, Que., tells the following story of broken health and renewed vigor: "I suffered for many months," said Mrs. Herbert, "from an impoverished condition of the blood, coupled with extreme nervousness. I was very pale and felt languid and indisposed to exertion. A dizzy sensation on arising quickly from a chair, or coming down stairs, often troubled me. The least exercise would leave me almost out of breath, and my heart would palpitate violently, while at other times I would feel a smothering sensation. Often my face and arms would swell and puff, and the arms became almost useless. I doctored more or less for the trouble, but did not get any real benefit until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had been using the pills only a few weeks when I found myself growing stronger and better in every way. I continued taking the pills for nearly three months—for I was determined the cure would be thorough—but sometime before I discontinued using them I felt in better health than I had enjoyed for years before. My sleep is now healthful and refreshing, my appetite excellent, and I feel equal to almost any exertion. I feel that I owe all this to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and it will always give me pleasure to recommend them."

It is the mission of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to make rich, red blood, nourish the nerves, tissues and various organs of the body, and thus by reaching the root of the trouble drive disease from the system. Other medicines act only upon the symptoms of the disease, and when such medicines are discontinued the trouble returns often in aggravated form. If you want health and strength be sure you get the genuine with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around every box. If your dealer cannot supply you the pills will be sent post paid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A TRIAL OF BLOOD.

The March of the Allies From Tien Tsin to Pekin Was One of Murder and Pillage.

Washington, May 6.—The State Department has received new proofs of the terrible and perhaps irretrievable conditions which exist under the foreign military rule in North China. One of the most trusted American officials there says, the question of raising the indemnity, though one of the most serious for the Chinese Government, is not paramount. If the whole horror of the murder and pillage done between Tien Tsin and Pekin comes to be understood in the United States and in Europe, the sum of it is so great as compared to the number of Christians who have suffered at the hands of the Chinese, that, rightly or wrongly, the Chinese are likely to be held the injured party. Lancers wantonly impaling little children by the wayside in the streets of Pekin are some of the least of the well authenticated horrors, and to some foreign soldiers a dead Chinese Christian is just as satisfactory an evidence of no quarter as a dead Boxer—they neither know nor care for such trifling distinctions.

The Chinese estimate that one million of their people have lost their lives by violent deaths or starvation about Pekin and Tien Tsin since the allies came. Well informed foreigners long resident here do not regard the estimate as exaggerated.

The North China News of March 28th endeavoring to tell why such a situation as the one alleged can exist, says: "Simply because Chinese civil authority has been suppressed, barried, driven away and nothing substituted for it. The country between the sea and Pekin has been devastated and the people have been killed indiscriminately or driven out of their homes to become bandits.

A Maid to Order.

A Story Touching on the Servant Question.

The table was charming. The pearly expanse of damask that infolded it was one of the Misses Dormond's most treasured possessions, saved out of a general wreck of family fortunes.

The old fashioned silver, of those irritable patterns which no modern shop can supply, gleamed like irregularly shaped planets at intervals across the cloth.

Moreover, a daffodil bulb cherished in window sill warmth had obligingly thrown out a handful of blossoms. This pot, sheathed in yellow tissue paper, made a thoroughly attractive centerpiece.

"It is simply lovely," said Winifred, with a little sigh of relief and satisfaction. "I shan't be in the least afraid to have Mrs. Caulkington's eagle eye turned upon it, even though you are a candidate for her secretaryship, Isabel, and so much depends upon making a good impression."

"The house couldn't fail to make a good impression," Isabel broke in. "It is clean and sweet and old fashioned from top to bottom. One can't say that a house has a soul. There's just one thing lacking. I do wish we had a good maid to wait on the table. I hate those embarrassing breaks in a home luncheon where the hostess is obliged to cut off in the middle of a sentence and bolt into the kitchen to bring the broiled spring course to table."

"Yes. That's always wretchedly embarrassing," Isabel agreed. "It's hard on the guests than the hostess too. However, there's no help for it. We can't keep a maid, and this suburb isn't a place where you can find a girl to call in for a day at a time. It's a pity, but it can't be helped."

"What is a pity, but can't be helped?" demanded the youngest Miss Dormond, who reappeared into the room just in time to hear the last half of the sentence.

Isabel and I were lamenting that we didn't have a maid to serve the luncheon Gertrude. We were saying how dreadfully embarrassing it is for a hostess to jump up to remove the plates after a course and to bring the next course to table."

"I never thought of that," Gertrude replied in a disappointed tone. "Our entertaining has always been so informal we're likely to make the guests clamor the plates and bring in the courses from the kitchen themselves. But it's true, as you say, that kind of thing won't do when we're entertaining Mrs. Caulkington. She's so to get back for Mrs. Caulkington's luncheon."

"I'm not afraid, but I'm glad of an excuse to absolve myself. I'm in awe of Mrs. Caulkington, and I tremble before the glare of her lorgnettes. You can make my excuses to Mrs. Caulkington and tell her that I was obliged to go into the city on pressing business."

It seemed an injustice that Gertrude should not be there to witness the success of the occasion for which they had all worked so hard.

The older girls reasoned, pleaded, represented, but Gertrude stood firm.

* * * * * * *

Mrs. Caulkington's critical eyes were already boring holes in the drawing room furniture, and the luncheon hour was but three minutes in the future.

Isabel, in her prettiest silk waist, was arranging the oyster plates upon the table preliminary to ushering their guest into the dining room.

Suddenly a purling of gingham skirts brushed the silence of the place, and a soft voice sounded in Isabel's ear.

"If yo' please, miss," said the voice, "Miss Gertrude done send me. I am de maid to ordah."

"Good gracious!" shrieked Isabel under her breath. She started back, the oyster plate in her hand narrowly escaping calamity.

She said "Good gracious" once more, and very fervently, when she turned, for there, not a yard from her side, waiting to be assigned to her duties, stood the most desirable of colored waitresses.

She was tall, well poised and, barring her skin, a strikingly handsome young woman. Her pink gingham gown fitted to perfection and closely resembled one worn by Gertrude for mornings on the porch. Her dainty ruffled apron was strikingly like one which Isabel herself wore while sewing. Perched saucily in her black, ripply hair she wore a bit of a cap, which, when examined at close range, seemed to be nothing more than a tuft of white lace cleverly pinned.

Isabel took a second look at her new acquisition and dropped into a chair, laughing weakly.

"Miss Gertrude done send me, miss," the maid repeated softly, "an she said fo' yo' to jest go set in de parlah an leave all de servin to me."

"Oh, Gertrude, Gertrude!" gurgled Isabel. "What nonsense won't that child attempt!"

The luncheon was faultlessly served. Never was waitress quicker, lighter, softer, more all seeing, more graceful.

Even the critical Mrs. Caulkington was impressed.

Afterward, when the luncheon party had adjourned to the drawing room, the guest deliberately led around to the subject of domestics.

"Do you find it as hard to get good girls in the suburbs as we do in the city?" she asked. "I imagine not, for that young waitress of yours is perfection itself."

"Well, good girls are very scarce here," answered Isabel, "and I've no doubt we'd have endless trouble if we had to change. But, you see, we have raised Anna ourselves. She knows our own ways and suits us perfectly. We've had her for more than ten years. I know she'll never leave us—unless, of course, she marries and has a home of her own."

"My dear girl," cried the visitor, with warmth, "if I were in your place I

OLD TUNES.

Old tunes, old tunes! How memory croons
Their rhythm through my soul tonight!
O joy replete or pathos sweet,
In scenes that charm my raptured sight!

A form once loved, by fancy moved,
Enthralls me as in days agone,
And bright eyes beam with love's first dream—
Life's warm unto mine own.

Hand clasps hand in friendship's bond
O'er vows once broken, now restored,
And laughter low, with music's flow,
Vibrate with one accord.

Oh, tender past: weird, mystic past!
Pain would I dream thy pleasures o'er,
And tunes, old tunes that memory croons,
Thrill through my soul forevermore.

We were bound for Alijos island, off the coast of Lower California, in the bark Dolphin, to look for an old wreck of 40 years before. One day, when yet 200 miles to the north of the island, a whale suddenly breached within 300 feet of our craft, which was making only about three knots an hour under a light breeze. The monster of the deep shot to the surface and above it as if propelled by an engine of 1,000 horsepower. At least 40 feet of his great body was in the air when he came down with a crash, and the fall kicked up such a sea that the bark was boarded by three waves in succession. Instead of sinking out of sight or making off the whale kept company with the vessel and gradually edged down toward us until a man could have tossed his cap over the rail on the broad back covered with patches of barnacles. Almost as the whale shot up from the depths of the sea our mate, whose name was Davids, cried out:

"Before heaven, but that's old Sam Patch, and he's after me!"

We had come out of a California port with a picked crew, excepting the mate. I mean by that that Captain Chambers knew his men personally, most of whom had sailed with him before. At the last moment the old mate of the bark had met with an accident, and Davids had been given the berth at an hour's notice. He had been found to be a man who thoroughly knew his business, and it was understood that was up to all our tricks. For seven long hours he hung to us, and then of a sudden he sank out of sight without so much as a splash. We argued that he had gone for good, and it was a weight off our minds, but Davids shook his head in a mournful way and replied:

"Sam Patch came here after me, and he won't leave for good till he gets me. He's only off to feed."

We reached the island without having seen more of him, however. As we came within a mile of the north shore the bark was thrown into the wind, the boat lowered, and Davids was to be rowed in to sound the depth and find a safe anchorage. Three sailors took their places at the oars, and the boat shoved off. It was a sunny sky and a calm sea, with never a thought of danger, but the yawl had not pulled above a cable's length from us and every man in the bark had his eye on her when she suddenly rose in the air with a crashing, rending noise. Below her appeared the great head of Sam Patch, and it was thrust upward until the stove boat was lifted 30 feet high and then slid off. When ten feet more of the body was exposed to view, the whale fell over with a mighty swash, rolled his great body over and over three or four times and then disappeared beneath the surface.

We had a second boat down in no time to pick up the men, but while four had gone in the boat there were only three to rescue. The trio were more or less knocked about and almost frightened to death but they had come off better than the mate. Whether the whale seized him in its mouth or drowned him as it rolled we could not say, but our search for the body was in vain, and Sam Patch disappeared to trouble us no more.

DR WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

This season of the year when coughs and colds are so prevalent, it would be advisable to keep a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup in the house.

It allays all inflammation and irritation of the breathing organs, and cures coughs and colds of young and old more quickly and effectually than any other remedy.

Mrs. Arthur Molaskey, White's Point, Queen's Co., N.B., writes: "In the fall of 1899, I was taken down with a severe attack of La Grippe which left me with a bad cough. I tried several remedies and could obtain no relief and was almost in despair of a cure when a friend advised me to take Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I took three bottles in all and it made a complete cure."

Why It Came

Scene: "Slater Shoe Store," prior to 1899:—

Customer: "Can't you give me a pair of Rubbers to fit my shoes? It seems impossible to get a Rubber that won't pinch or be loose on my foot. You know, I have a peculiar shaped foot, and have to wear one of the "Slater" special shapes. Now, why don't you people make special rubbers to fit these shapes?"

"Slater Shoe" agents had so many customers who wanted rubbers to fit "Slater Shoes" that the "Slater Shoe" makers decided to meet their wishes, and,

Last year "The Slater Shoe Rubber" made its appearance. It fits all shapes of "Slater" and other shoes.

All styles of rubbers and overshoes, $1.00 up.

barrassing," Isabel agreed. "It's hard on the guests than the hostess too. However, there's no help for it. We can't keep a maid, and this suburb isn't a place where you can find a girl to call in for a day at a time. It's a pity, isn't it, but it can't be helped."

"What is a pity, but can't be helped?" demanded the youngest Miss Dormond, who projected into the room just in time to hear the last light of the sentence.

"Isabel and I were lamenting that we didn't have a maid to serve the luncheon, Gertrude. We were saying how desperately embarrassing it is for a hostess to jump up to remove the plates after a course and to bring the next course in alone."

"I never thought of that," Gertrude replied, in a disappointed tone. "Our entertaining has always been so informal we're likely to make the guests change the plates and bring in the courses from the kitchen themselves. But it's true, as you say, that kind of thing won't do when we're entertaining Mrs. Caulkington. She's so critical that her eyes burn holes in anything she call on. We wouldn't mind her little peculiarities if she were merely the acquaintance, but if Isabel is going to command a big, fat salary she must make a big, fat impression. I'm sure Mrs. Caulkington would cut her down in size if she knew how we are situated—how badly we need that secretaryship. Something must be done."

"Gertrude, dear, you know perfectly well that nothing can be done. There are only two dozen girls left and in any case you can't secure a girl here in the country to come in for just one day."

"I know that, but what's my dear? An idea dawns in my brain! Let it mature!"

"An idea for what? For getting us a maid?"

"Yes, my dear—a ready maid, so to speak."

"Silly! Do you think Isabel and I have time to waste upon your vaporings?"

"A ready maid, no, a maid to order. Don't talk to me for three minutes. I feel the idea grow in my cerebrum, and it really is good one."

The young lady sat down in the little chair's window seat and buried her face in her hands.

Three minutes later she sprang up and pirouetted triumphantly around the dining table.

"Girls, I've solved the problem," she cried. "And I'll stand for it that you shall have a maid to serve Mrs. Caulkington's luncheon. A stunning maid, well trained, light footed, soft voiced; a maid who will not send so much as one plate of raw oysters down the dumb-waiter for your guest; who will do things without clangings and will not cause the downfall and destruction of precious willow pattern china. In fact, the maid I propose to offer you will be an explanatory key with copious illustrations to the entire servant question!"

Gertrude's sisters were very far from despising the girl's ready imagination. It had often helped to solve an economic problem which they themselves had abandoned in despair. But this crisis of the maid to order seemed considerably beyond Gertrude even, and they frankly announced themselves skeptics.

"Do you mean to look for your remarkable maid here in the suburb or elsewhere?" they demanded.

"I shall procure her in the city, or, rather, I shall go on a trip to the city and I will send the maid to you in my absence."

"But, Gertrude, if you leave now for the city you won't have time, child, to secure a girl and get her back in time for the luncheon. Isabel and I will be worn to shadows trying to get the meal ready ourselves. Besides, what girl will you get to come out here to the suburbs on such short notice? Isabel agreed. "It's hard on the guests than the hostess too. However, there's no help for it. We can't keep a maid, and this suburb isn't a place where you can find a girl to call in for a day at a time. "THAT'S OLD SAM PATCH, AND HE'S AFTER ME!"

an hour's notice. He had been found to be a man who thoroughly knew his business, and it was understood that he was an old whaleman. He had spun no yarns of his adventures, however, and now for the first time, as the whale kept pace with us and the frightened crew tiptoed about the decks, the mate gave us a brief outline. He had been whaling in every sea, both in sail and steam vessels, and had been ashore after his last cruise only a month when joining us. Three years before in a whaler out of London they had lowered for a monster whale off the Madeiras and fought him for four hours. The leviathan had smashed two boats and killed five men. David, in his boat had got him fast, but the whale sounded so deep they had to cut the line and let him go. Three months later 700 miles to the north the whaler encountered the same fish and had another boat destroyed and two men killed. Again Davids got fast, but after being towed 15 miles to windward had to cut loose. Six months later, down off the coast of Brazil, he had his third fight with the same whale and got in a third harpoon.

During the next two years Davids sighted that whale, which had come to be known as Sam Patch, off the Cape of Good Hope, off the coast of Peru and off the coast of Mexico, and on each and every occasion at least one boat was smashed and some one killed, and the mate also made fast and had to let go again. The whale had scars by which he could easily be identified. He had always been known as a wild fish, and that he should rise so near our bark and keep company with us for hours was more than a mystery to the mate.

"I'll tell you what it is," he said after leaning his elbows on the rail and taking a long look at the vast bulk almost rubbing our starboard side; "that whale is after me. He knows I'm aboard here. Six of my harpoons are rusting in his carcass, and though I'm not after him on this voyage he wants revenge."

We laughed at the idea, but the mate clung to it. He was an intelligent, fairly educated man, and it was evident that he fully believed in his own words. Perhaps it was his earnestness that made us also come to believe that there might be something in it. Although it looked absurd at first sight. When the whale had been keeping company with us for three hours, we let the bark go four points off her course, thinking to quietly steal away from him, but he changed his course and kept with her. Then we shortened sail, but he slowed up. For an hour we worked to part company, but he

Very often neuralgia is complained of when, in reality, the halfforgotten stump of an old tooth is at the root of the matter. If there is any doubt about it, a visit to a good dentist would decide the question once for all.

In cases of acute neuralgia, relief may be afforded by rubbing together equal parts of chloral and powdered camphor and painting the painful spot with it.

Many people cannot take quinine, but those who can will find it the best remedy of all.

Asthma Gasps

Too many asthma sufferers give up their search for cure, believing that their particular case is beyond the control of scientific treatment.

It is only necessary to point all such to a new hope in Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, the one great remedy which has proven its efficiency not only as a prompt relief, but also as a thorough cure for asthma.

Mrs. George Budden, Putnamville, Ont., says:—"I feel it my duty to recommend Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, as I had the asthma very bad; could get nothing to do me good. A friend of mine persuaded me to try this remedy, I did so, and it cured me."

It is impossible to imagine a better treatment for asthma than Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. It soothes the excited nerves, clears the bronchial tubes, gives prompt relief to the frightful spasms, and when used regularly, thoroughly and permanently cures asthma. 25 cents, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

all men and add that to your own if you would learn."

"Look on the dark side as well as the bright side of the picture." "A man who has fair winds all his life will never amount to much; he must have head winds and trials to bring out his mettle. Those trials make him look forward. Warnings come to people to put them on their guard." Speaking in a nautical way he adds: "The warnings come from clouds, the moon, the color of the water at night, and animal life. Animals are a good guide to us," he adds, "if we only study them. Before a storm the birds always fly high up in the air."

Then, returning to his favorite theme, human nature, he adds emphatically: "If a man does not find out his faults and correct them, he will die with them. If a man wants to succeed he must first master himself, his mind, his thoughts, his eyes, his hearing and every part of his body. He must be the master in chief of himself or he will never master any one else. If he has a weak point he will fail there. It will be the source of his ruin. If you want to lengthen your days do not steal your nights."

When my own view with this striking and masterful character came to an end I could not help feeling that sense of awe which has often taken possession of me when gazing at some lofty mountain peak or studying the beauty and symmetry of some magnificent piece of architecture.

Here was a living, moving, breathing, masterful character, and I felt that high as the clouds float above the meadows, so high are the ideals of this great man above the rest of mankind.—Martha Craig, in Ottawa Free Press.

Electric Light in a Coal Mine.

A big colliery in Lanarkshire, Scotland, is to be lighted by electricity throughout. The electric light plant, as proposed, is divided into three parts. In the first the dynamo will run 300 lamps in the colliery itself, to be distributed both throughout the pit and above ground. Another is devoted to the lighting of thirty-four workmen's cottages, which are about 700 yards from the colliery, there being three lights in each cottage, or a total of 102 lamps in all. The third consists of a complete electric pumping plant, capable of delivering 100 gallons of water per minute from the adjacent river to the colliery. The dynamos for the lighting of the pit and the workmen's cottages are being so constructed that each dynamo can be used for either purpose. Both machines are designed to give a constant pressure of current at the cottages; that is, no matter what demand for current there may be at any time in other parts of the plant, there will never be a dim light in the workman's cottage.

The Fate of the Fly.

At one of the English-German schools in the city a teacher recently announced to a class of very young girls that they could have 20 minutes to write a composition on any subject of their own selection. A bright girl, whose head is adorned with a liberal supply of beautiful auburn hair, handed in the following:

"Flies from Flyland.—Mrs. Fly had a very great deal of trouble with her children. They worried the old lady so much she did not know what to do. One little fly—Worst One by name—never did obey his mother. Now, of course, there never yet was a case of disobedience which was not punished in some manner. If you do wrong and nobody is around to punish you, you usually knock against something or fall down and hurt yourself.

"We will see now what little Worst One did and how he was punished. One day he and his brothers had a chat, and in it they spoke of the jam that the cook left standing on the kitchen table, and they all determined to get just the tiniest bit of it, and they went. Now, the mother knew of this, and she went with them, and of course she did not scold. Oh, no! 'Why, every fly eats jam, but you must not go inside the jam jar, as no one knows what will happen to you if you do. Just rest on the top,' the mother said.

"The others were all afraid and did not go in, but little Worst One, he did not care; he was going in, and in he went in spite of what his mother said. And what do you think happened to him? Never before in the history of flies did such a strange thing happen.

DR. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

Mrs. M. F. Long, of Le Loup, Franklin Co., Kans., writes: "Words cannot express how grateful I am for your kind advice and good medicines. I have been in poor health more or less all my life. In the past nine years grew worse, and two years ago I was so poorly could hardly drag around. I consulted a specialist, and he said I had ulceration and that an operation would have to be performed. This did not seem necessary to me, so time went by, and at last I wrote to Dr. Pierce asking advice. I soon got a helpful answer advising me to try his medicines, the 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and also his 'Pleasant Pellets.' I began taking 'Favorite Prescription' and the other medicines as advised. When commencing I weighed 105 pounds, and after taking one bottle of each I felt like a new woman. In one month I gained 8 pounds. After taking two bottles of each of the medicines, I began to look like a woman and not like a skeleton, and that weary tired feeling all left me."

commenced operations Tuesday, and a very busy season is looked for. Last year, our readers will remember, the mill had to close down several times on account of a shortage of logs. This was caused by the low water in the streams in the spring. This will not be the case this year as there has been plenty of water to float the logs to the lake. Consequently we may look forward to a very steady season's cut. This will have a very decided beneficial effect upon the general business of the town.

Queer Nests of Fishes.

During a summer vacation the rare opportunity was given me of studying the nest building habits of a small fish that frequents the shallow places in Lake Sunapee, N. H.

My fish had selected a quiet cove within a few feet of the shore and quite near a row of cottages. Presumably they were less in fear of man than of the finny tribe. Their nests were circular in form and about the size of a bushel basket. They were hollowed out in the center like a saucer and were kept in perfect shape and beautifully clean by a swift, fanlike motion of the tail fin of the fish, held in a perpendicular position. The bottom of the lake being of a dark color and these nests made of white sand, you could easily see what a neat housekeeper this little fish was. Each nest had its owner, who fought for her "hearth and home" with great valor, chasing off every intruder and seldom being vanquished in the fray.

This pugnacious creature was essentially a home body, seldom leaving a nest except to dart off a few in quest of food or in hot pursuit of an invader. This little fish is a bold robber as well as a valiant fighter. I noticed one of the largest specimens drive a smaller one from her nest again and again and then take possession of it, spending her time between her own nest and the one she had robbed. I counted three dozen of these nests, not more than a foot apart. Some of these fish were beautifully colored.

I went down to the lake very early one morning to take a look at my pets. The water was very calm and clear. Nearly all of the fish were lying perfectly still in the center of their nest, apparently fast asleep.—Interstate Journal.

Her Inheritance.

"Your daughter's voice," said the professor, after the first lesson, "really has a fine timbre."

"There!" said Mrs. Rocksley. "I always knew it. I've told my husband ever since the day Adeline was born that she took after him. He was in the lumber business when we got married."—Chicago Times-Herald.
